MESSAGE FROM THE SR. DIRECTOR, PEOPLE & CULTURE

This People Strategy sets out Nutrition International’s plan to invest in its people as a critical enabler of delivering the organization’s Second Investment Case for 2025 to 2031. This strategy outlines how a future-ready, high-performing, values-driven, and security-conscious workforce will underpin efforts to reach 800 million vulnerable people with high-impact nutrition interventions across more than 60 countries and mobilize 1 billion dollars.

The strategy is anchored in the conviction that organizational impact is multiplied when staff are well-supported, safe, and equipped to excel. It commits to strengthening workforce capabilities, leadership, culture, data-driven people management, and employee experience so that Nutrition International can operate effectively in diverse and often complex environments.

By aligning people initiatives with programmatic priorities, this strategy ensures that the right talent, structures, and systems are in place to deliver sustainable results at scale. It confirms Nutrition International’s commitment to being an employer of choice in global health, where staff are engaged, protected, and empowered to contribute to ending malnutrition worldwide.

HR operations center around the Employee Experience concept, which reflects the behaviors and beliefs each staff member holds based on their own journey through the employee lifecycle. The framework emphasizes three core principles: Engagement, Accountability and Compliance. Its components include cyclical initiatives (awards programs, compensation planning, reporting cycles); employee engagement (survey development, analysis, action items and implementation); HR systems (platform integration and data management); contract management (offers through extensions to exits); health and safety (inspections, regulatory compliance, meetings/actions); time and attendance (training, policy interpretation, troubleshooting); absence management (annual, compensatory, sick/STD/LTD and parental leave); employee relations (conflict management and organizational change support); investigations (planning, execution and decision-making); and recruitment and selection (hiring manager intake through job posting, interviews, selection and reference/background/MDS checks).

Learning and Development is organized around the central theme of building a continuous learning culture by shared consciousness, with an emphasis on upskilling and retooling in alignment with values as key operational principles.
